1

JOHN LENNON

In the mid '60's, the high-heeled footwear popularly known as "Chelsea boots" were adopted by the Fab Four and the iconic Beatle Boot was born. This pair belonged to John Lennon personally. Though not as popular as they were in the Beatles' heyday, this style is still a top seller for many boot companies.

2

PRINCE

The word “genius” is overused in relation to pop artists, but in the case of Prince, it’s the only term that applies. Wildly creative and gifted as a singer, songwriter, producer and multi-instrumentalist, the man was simply a once-in-a-generation artist. He wore this beaded shirt in the 1990s.

ELVIS PRESLEY

Rock 'n' roll music has had plenty of talented and iconic performers, but only one KING – Elvis Aaron Presley. Much more than a simple pop star, Elvis became a transformational figure and true cultural force. His impact and influence is almost impossible to overstate. These black nylon pajamas were owned and worn by the King himself.

DAVID BOWIE

The death of David Bowie on January 10th, 2016 left an unfillable void in the music world. His influence on the sound, look and creative process of modern music is simply unequaled. David wore this gold outfit on stage during his 1987 'Glass Spider' tour. This tour was the most ambitious of Bowie's career and featured the legendary Peter Frampton on guitar.

5

SLASH

This lovely bit of guitar craft is a Les Paul built specifically for Slash by the Gibson custom shop in the early '90s.

Slash used it during Guns N' Roses' 1991-1993 world tour in support of their epic 'Use Your Illusion' album set.

This instrument has seen concert stages worldwide in the hands of one of the last true guitar heroes. Note the tape on the guitar's headstock that Slash used to hold his picks while performing. The top hat on display is also from Slash's personal collection.

6

MADONNA

This outfit was owned and worn by the undisputed queen of the pop divas – Madonna Louise Ciccone. Madonna transcended the role of mere “pop star” long ago and has evolved into a cultural institution of music, art and fashion. Every female pop artist today owes her a huge debt.

ANGUS YOUNG

AC/DC's diminutive lead guitarist, Angus Young, has made a career out of bludgeoning audiences with his uncompromising sound and unforgettable riffs – all while wearing an Australian schoolboy's outfit. Along the way he became a bona-fide icon and one of the most important artists in heavy rock history. This velvet schoolboy suit belonged to Angus and he wore it on stage many times.

JOHNNY CASH

One of the very few artists in history revered by music fans of every genre, Johnny Cash was the very definition of country music. His unique style and persona was a massive influence on contemporary artists and his songs make up a huge part of the American musical lexicon. Johnny wore this stylish black coat on stage.

MICHAEL JACKSON

Known as the King of Pop, Michael Jackson was destined for greatness at a young age. As a child, he became the lead singer of the Jackson family's popular Motown group, the Jackson 5, and his solo career was one of staggering, international success. This Bad video-worn jacket was signed by Michael Jackson.

10

FRANK SINATRA

The Legendary “Chairman of the Board” defined traditional American pop and swing styles, was the very first teen idol and became one of the most iconic figures in history. This stylish houndstooth suit is from his personal wardrobe.
